Inquiries from oil companies located in Brunei, China, Indonesia, Vietnam and other countries developing new oil fields have increased with the successful use of cesium formate brines in high pressure, high temperature (HPHT) well construction in other parts of the world. "Cesium formate has been proven to be the most effective completion solution for HPHT wells," said James Turner, vice president and general manager, Cabot Specialty Fluids business. "It has consistently surpassed all other fluids in the field to solve hydraulics, well control and corrosion control issues as well as other HPHT challenges. We look forward to helping oil companies in China, the Asia Pacific region and Australia develop and expand their oil and gas production capabilities."

Cabot Specialty Fluids is the world's only significant producer of cesium formate brine. Since its introduction to the market in 1999, Cabot's cesium formate brine has been used with great success in more than 110 HPHT wells in the North Sea, Gulf of Mexico, Eastern Europe, and Argentina.
